American Jewish Committee Charges 50 N. Y. Banks Bar Jews From Top Jobs

The American Jewish Committee has charged that fifty mutual savings banks in New York City had "systematically excluded" Jews from top-management and policy-making positions. Theodore Ellenoff, chairman of the Civil Rights Committee of the agency's New York chapter, says the New York Times, said the charge was based on a four-month survey of more than 400 executives and staff officers and 750 trustees of the banks.

A report, released at a news conference at the agency's Institute of Human Relations, 165 East 56th Street, said that less than three per cent of those surveyed had been identified as Jewish, "although Jews make up one-quarter of New York's city population and are obviously prominent in the city's life."

Austin S. Murphy, managing director of the Savings Banks Association of New York State, sharply repudiated the charge, asserting that there was no basis "for an accusation that savings banks have policies of discrimination on the basis of racial or religious background."

Savings banks, he said, "have Jewish trustees and employes at all levels, including officers. We, of course, do not know how many Jewish employes the banks have," he added, "nor how many of any other particular background, because banks, in accordance with law, do not hire or keep records 'based on race, creed, color, or national origin.'"

Dr. Murphy said that the New York State savings banks hire and promote "the most competent people that can be obtained without regard to religious affiliation."

The American Jewish Committee, in breaking down the three per cent figure in its report, said that less than 2.5 per cent of the more than 400 officers were identified as Jewish while the parallel figure for 750 trustees was less than 3.5 per cent.

A team of eight researchers, who made the survey, reported that no Jewish executive officers had been found in 82 per cent of the banks, reports the New York Times, while no Jewish trustees had been represented in 60 per cent of the banks surveyed.

The report contended that the "evidence suggests that insensitivity and indifference, if not deliberate exclusion, have hardened over the years into de facto discrimination."

Mr. Ellenoff, in reply to a question, said the banks had been unaware that the survey was being made, adding that it was now being made public to "attract the attention of the many good men on the boards of the banks, who, when they realize the broad-scale nature of the discrimination, will proceed to make changes."

Mr. Ellenoff, a New York lawyer and a member of the firm of Gartenberg & Ellenoff, said that Jews made up 25 per cent of the city's population and accounted for 50 per cent of the college graduates. The American Jewish Year Book recently listed a population of 5,586,000 Jews in the United States, including 1,836,000 who live in the city's five boroughs.

He said that his agency did not suggest the establishment of a quota system, adding that "on the contrary, recruitment and promotion on the basis of individual merit is the solution."

Mr. Ellenoff said the savings bank survey was "illustrative of the restrictive patterns" that his organization found "to exist in many financial institutions and among the nation's leading corporations."

In 1963, the Committee made public a report that dealt with discrimination against Jews in top-management positions among the nation's leading fifty public utilities corporations.

In 1964, it issued another report that dealt with the same theme in a variety of industries in the Philadelphia area. It has also released studies that dealt with religious discrimination in various other fields, says the New York Times. Mr. Ellenoff said that the savings bank report was "illustrative of the restrictive patterns" that his agency found "to exist in many American financial institutions and among the nation's leading corporations."

British Officer Calls Belsen A Horror Matchless, Urges "Never Forget"

One thousand survivors of Nazi death camps, most of them from the notorious Bergen-Belsen, marked the twentieth anniversary of their freedom with a dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, in New York. The guest of honor was the former chief medical officer of the Second British Army, Brig. Gen. H. L. Glyn Hughes, says the New York Times, who played a major role in the liberation of the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp on April 15, 1945.

General Hughes, who came from London for the occasion, termed the Belsen camp as "the worst horror story of the war." Nothing in his experience in World War I and World War II could "match the horror of Belsen," he said.

In the last few months before the liberation, General Hughes said, fifty thousand Jewish men, women, and children died, and thirteen thousand more died from malnutrition and disease after the liberation. The former British medical officer strongly pleaded for "the world never to forget" the crimes of the Nazi regime.

In his audience were many who still bore on their arms tattooed numbers, grim reminders of their imprisonment.

Josef Rosensaft, president of the World Federation of Bergen-Belsen Associations, which sponsored the event, announced the establishment of an annual "Remembrance Award" for the best creation in literature, art, music, and research dealing with the Nazi terror.

Mr. Rosensaft, a surviver of the Belsen and the Auschwitz camps, said each award would carry with it a premium of $2,500. A fund of $50,000 has been made available for the awards.

Sam E. Bloch, general secretary of the Belsen Associations, announced the publication of a monumental documentary album entitled "Holocaust And Rebirth" that depicts the story of the liberation of Belsen and the rehabilitation of its survivors.

$Ten-Million Einstein Medical College Is Open In Bronx

The $10-million Albert Einstein College of Medicine, air-conditioned throughout its twelve stories, has opened in the Bronx. The hospital's first patient was thirteen-year-old Barbara Patterson, of Framingham, Mass., who was admitted to the diagnostic center for examination and possible treatment, writes John C. Devlin, in the New York Times. She received a bouquet of flowers and greetings from Mrs. John V. Lindsay, wife of the city's new Mayor.

Mrs. Lindsay, making her first appearance as the city's First Lady, wore a bright red topcoat over a semi-fitted, pale blue sheath dress. She appeared poised but said:

"You know I have felt slightly nervous about this. Does one congratulate somebody upon being a patient in a hospital — even one as beautiful as this one? All I can say is that this pretty little girl looks much too healthy to be a patient in a hospital. And she is also as bright as a button."

Then the Mayor's wife gave the bouquet to the girl and wished her "the very best of luck."

The hospital, which was begun three years ago, will not be ready for full occupancy for about two months.

It is a brick-finished, reinforced-concrete structure that stands on a knoll adjacent to the Albert Einstein College. The hospital's formal title is the Albert Einstein College of Medicine of Yeshiva University. Ultimately it will have three hundred and seventy-five beds.

It has two entrances: one on Eastchester Road and the other on Tenbroeck Avenue. A parking lot for 300 vehicles is being developed.

Three floors are devoted to diagnostic work. The self-contained Diagnostic Center has fifty-three examination and consultation rooms. It contains sections for ophthalmology, neurology, cardiology, dental surgery, and obstetrics and gynecology. There is also a pediatric diagnostic area.

In addition to its own laboratory, the center will provide the specialized services of a radiol-

Rabbi Defends Humaneness Of Jewish Ritual Slaughter

Rabbi Israel Miller, president of the Rabbinical Council of America, took sharp issue with Friends of Animals, Inc., supporters of the Hansbeck Slaughter bill now before the New York State Legislature. Last December 27, the organization ran an advertisement in The New York Times urging support for the bill, which attempts to eliminate the shackling and hoisting of animals in kosher slaughter.

Preaching at the Kingsbridge Jewish Center, 124 Eames Place, the Bronx, Rabbi Miller charged that the ad was "inflammatory" and implied that "shechita" (Jewish ritual slaughter) was inhumane, says the New York Times, writer, George Dugan. Friends of Animals, Inc., the rabbi said, "would lead the unwary reader to believe that the religiously prescribed method of slaughter is inhumane and that the bill they advocate is the only legislation concerned with the humane treatment of animals.

"They, and particularly their leader, Mrs. Alice Schmid, are well aware that the New York State Humane Association, which includes nearly all the humane groups in the state, have offered a bill which has the approval of all the national Jewish groups and which more than adequately covers the problem of humane slaughter.

"We must conclude that this small group which is outside the mainstream of the humane movement has displayed an insensitivity to the religious commitments and practices of the Jewish community and is more interested in sowing the seeds of disharmony and religious dissension among the people

Editor Of An Influential German Weekly Of New York, Left Loyal Readers Among Uprooted People All Over The World

Dr. Manfred George, editor of Aufbau, a German language weekly newspaper published in New York, died in the University Hospital. He was seventy-two years old and lived at 785 West End Avenue. Dr. George, a biographer and novelist, who was known as a liberal editor in Germany before the rise of Hitler, reports the New York Times, became editor of Aufbau in 1939, after arriving in New York as a penniless refugee.

Aufbau was then a small monthly newsletter published by the German Jewish Club of New York, which is now the New World Club, Inc. Dr. George marshaled a distinguished advisory board, including Albert Einstein and Thomas Mann, and built the publication into an influential weekly with a circulation of 30,000.

In World War II, the Aufbau helped thousands of refugees adjust to new homes and aided in the reunion of families and friends. It offered subscribers English lessons, information about naturalization, jobs, and housing.

Aufbau changed with the times. Its search column, which assisted refugees in tracing families after the war, gave way to a supplement to help Jews to establish claims for restitution from the German Government. Today, it carries theater and opera reviews, columns on the stock market and hobbies, as well as articles on world affairs.

"Aufbau," Dr. George once said, "never stressed the concept of collective guilt for Germany." This resulted in friendly relations with the German Government. In 1961, Theodor Heuss, President of West Germany, gave Aufbau an exclusive story about the decision of his Government to pay Jews for loss of property under Hitler.

Dr. George toiled as many as one hundred hours a week, aided by a staff of thirty, to get Aufbau to its subscribers throughout the United States and many foreign countries. His reward was a loyal readership among uprooted people all over the world.

He was born in Berlin, the son of a businessman, and studied law at the Universities of Berlin, Greifswald, and Geneva. In World War I, he served in the German army and was discharged in 1915, says the New York Times, after being severely wounded. In 1917, he received a Doctor of Jurisprudence degree from the University of Berlin.

While a student, he entered journalism. He served for two years as managing editor of the weekly Deutsche Montagszeitung. In 1917 he joined the Ullstein Verlag, newspaper publishers. He served as local editor of several of the Berlin papers and then became chief editor of the Berliner Abendpost.

Later he went to Silesia as a correspondent and to direct the Ullstein office in Breslau. While reporting on the Upper Silesian plebiscite during the Kapp Putsch of 1920, he was arrested by right-wing insurgents and escaped a firing squad only after producing a certificate of military service.

He left Ullstein in 1923 to join the Mosse Verlag, for whose newspapers he was drama critic and a correspondent. He returned to Ullstein in 1928 as chief editor of Tempo and was co-editor of the cultural magazine, Marsyas.

In the nineteen-twenties and early nineteen-thirties, he wrote political articles for liberal journals, radio dramas, and a musical revue, "Oh, U.S.A." which had 50 performances in Berlin in 1931.

He also wrote short stories, novels, including "Eine Nacht In Kattowitz," which was seized and destroyed by the Nazis before its scheduled publication; and brief biographies, including one of Marlene Dietrich.

"The Case Of Ivar Kreuger," was the title of his study of the Swedish financier, which was translated into English and Italian.

A member of the German Zionist movement, Dr. George wrote an early popular biography of Theodor Herzl, the Zionist leader, with introductions by Mann and Einstein.

With the growth of Nazism, Dr. George became an active opponent, serving for several months as president of the Republican party of Germany.

After the Nazis took control in 1933, he went on foot over the mountains into Czechoslovakia and became editor of a Prague newspaper, says the New York Times. In 1935, helped to found the Judische Revue.

He spent six months in Spain during the Civil War, reporting from the Loyalist side to Czechoslovak, Swiss, Austrian, Dutch, and Rumanian papers.

After the Munich pact of 1938, Dr. George made his way to the U.S. through Hungary, Yugoslavia, Italy, Switzerland, and France. He started on the Aufbau at a salary of $15 a month.

At the celebration of the publication's 30th anniversary, March 21, at the Hunter College Assembly Hall, the speakers included Mayor Wagner; Dr. Heinrich Knappstein, who was the West German Ambassador, and diplomatic representatives of Israel and Austria. President Johnson sent greetings.

Dr. George wrote thousands of articles for leading European and United States publications and had interviewed, among others, the late Dr. Albert Schweitzer, David Ben-Gurion, and Mr. Johnson.

EDITOR OF AUFBAU

In 1963, West Berlin's Mayor Willy Brandt presented to Dr. George the Berliner Bar award. He was a member of the Overseas Press Club, the Foreign Press Association, the Jewish Academy of Sciences, Bnai Brith, and the Zionist Organization of America, says the New York Times. Surviving are his widow, the former Miss Jeanette Simon, a former social worker whom he married in 1920 in Germany, a son, Frank D. George who is an architect of Stamford, Conn.; a daughter, Mrs. Renee G. O'Sullivan, who is a book illustrator; and three grandchildren. There was a private funeral service.

A lawyer, prolific author of plays and biographies, a journalist who ranged the world and a leader of liberal German republican politics, he was one of the tens of thousands of German-Jewish professionals who contributed to the flowering of a liberal and humane German culture before Hitler, says the New York Herald Tribune. It was his mission, Dr. George wrote later, to preserve in America what remained of that tradition.

ASHDOD'S ENGLISH-SPEAKING COMMUNITY: EVERYTHING IS NEW IN ASHDOD

By Y. Ben Gedalia, of the Jewish Agency American Section, in New York

The Ashdod I saw on a recent sunny afternoon made me blink and rub my eyes in disbelief. When I last travelled through this part of southern Israel, about seven years ago, I had been surrounded on every side by monotonous yellow sand dunes extending from the coastal road to the unindented Mediterranean shore. Now, I was in the main square of a town, broad thoroughfares, modern apartments, shops, offices, factories, a deep seaport, and a population of 25,000. Everything looked spectacularly new, the buildings, the roads, the trees, as if they had just been taken out of a package. And many of the people, too, walked with the self-conscious stance of recent arrivals, checking street names and memorizing directions.

Seeing Ashdod sprung so abruptly out of the sand dunes, I could believe the bold forecasts of its planners, that within a score or so of years this one-time hamlet would grow into a metropolis of some 350,000 souls, and be Israel's second largest city. This vision is motivating some 10,000 people a year, newcomers and old-timers alike, to establish their homes in Ashdod.

The Ashdod enterprise is moving forward with incredible, almost bewildering momentum. Situated almost exactly half-way between the northern and southern frontiers of Israel, it adjoins the rich citrus-growing belt, is within easy reach of the phosphate, potash, and diversified mineral deposits of the Negev, and the new oil fields of Heleta. This accounts for the location there of the deep seaport, a project of magnificent proportions designed to serve the fast-developing hinterland to stimulate industrial and commercial growth. No wonder Ashdod has become an attractive proposition to so many people, among them some eighty families from English-speaking countries.

They come from Britain, South Africa, the United States, Canada, and Australia, most of them newcomers to the country, but also veteran settlers who want to be in it from the start. I met some of them during my visit to Ashdod. While they expressed diverse views on many of the topics we discussed, all of them without exception were agreed that building a new town is an exciting experience. In the words of one informant; "It's like living in a colossal kaleidoscope, the patterns change all the time."

Shmuel Halevi has been in Ashdod since 1959; he moved with his wife and two youngsters into one of the very first permanent apartments to go up then. In London, England, from where he emigrated 15 years ago, Halevi (then Roberts) ran his own electrical retailing and contracting business. For the past 11 years, he has been working as an electrical technician at the power station near Ashdod which services the southern part of the country. He is also founder and chairman of Ashdod's English-speaking Settlers' Association, established in 1963.

Middle-aged, dark, speaking fluent Hebrew with an unmistakable English accent, Halevi, who has a 21-year old son just out of the Army, and a 19-year old daughter in the air force, prefers to speak about his Association rather than of himself.

"We started with about 45 members," he explained, "and now we've grown to over a hundred, thanks mainly to the constantly expanding English-speaking community. And we're just at the beginning. The stronger we grow, the more we attract by our presence. I myself am conducting a considerable correspondence with prospective immigrants in English-speaking countries, people who want advice and on-the-spot information."

The basic aim of the Association, as explained in its printed bulletin, is to encourage and help newcomers from English-speaking countries to Israel and to Ashdod. While the Jewish Agency is responsible for immigration and absorption, and shoulders major responsibility for the newcomer until he finds his feet in Israel, the E.S.S.A. does significant supplementary work on a voluntary basis, helping in his cultural and social integration. The Association is affiliated with the British Settlers' Association and co-operates with the South African Zionist Federation and the Association of Americans and Canadians in Israel. It is a strictly non-political body.

Speaking of the attractions that Ashdod holds out for people from English-speaking countries, Halevi explained that one obvious factor is the existence of industrial enterprises established in the town by western firms like Leyland, Rogosin, Australian Wool, Revlon, Acrilan, and numerous smaller concerns. Many of the senior, and not so senior, positions in these enterprises are filled by Anglo-Saxon settlers, some of them having been brought over to Israel by their employers.

"But not every English-speaking immigrant in Ashdod is in the managerial category," Halevi was quick to add. "Not a few of the fairly recent arrivals have come to us without means and, what is worse, without a trade. Some people abroad seem to think that one can get along well in Israel without a skill, as though the very air of the land induces a miraculous transformation. In fact, a person without some kind of a trade can find it much harder to earn a living here than in his country of origin. To be gainfully employed, even in a new town, you need some sort of expertise, however minimal. Ashdod has many openings for tradesmen, technicians, engineers and, so forth. It can be tough, however, for the fellow with no productive skill."

I asked the obvious question: "Doesn't a separate organization for English-speaking residents tend to isolate its members from the remainder of the community?"

Halevi thought not. "We organize open social and cultural functions," he said, "and carry out many joint programs with other immigrant associations. These functions bring our people into contact with other immigrants whom they might not otherwise meet. Integration is a slow process and you cannot expect a person who has just arrived from England or America or South Africa to immediately throw himself into the life of the community and mix with all and sundry.

"In a sense, our Association serves as a bridge to the wider community and the proof is that many of our people have forged friendships with immigrants from non-English speaking countries, thanks largely to the joint functions we have organized. And something else," he added as an afterthought, "where the parents don't mix, the children do. Within a month of arrival, they're jabbering away in Hebrew and before you know it, you find they have brought Israel into your home. Ask the parents and they'll tell you it's the children who really lubricate the wheels of integration."

At that point Halevi excused himself. He had to return to work. I accompanied him part of the way, past new housing estates, new shops, new schools, new everything. "Impressive, isn't it?" he remarked, with a touch of pride in his voice. "Ashdod is one of those places that command respect."

RABBI DEFENDS HUMANENESS OF RITUAL SLAUGHTER

of New York State than it is in promoting and safeguarding animal welfare.

"I speak not only for 900 Orthodox rabbis in the Rabbinical Council, but for the entire organized Jewish community in expressing consternation with this intemperate advertisement and the legislation which it seeks to promote.

"For the Jew, the humane treatment of animals is a basic principle commanded upon him by his religious commitment. The practice of 'schechita' is an expression of that commandment. It is most gratifying to us to note that the Congress of the United States, when it adopted legislation covering the humane slaughter of animals, specifically recognized 'shechita' as a humane method of slaughter."

Moses I. Feuerstein, president of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, had called the advertisement "intemperate, destructive and divisive," reports the New York Times. "Its major effect," he said, "was to promote disharmony and discrimination in an area of utmost delicacy affecting the religious practices of the Jewish community."

Why wait for spring?

The wise ones take advantage of winter. Skilled men are more readily available in the wintertime—ready to do your repairs and renovations when you want them. Materials are in generous supply too, and your renovation budget will often go further in winter, thanks to off-season discounts and extended payment plans.

You can borrow up to $4,000 with up to ten years to repay, at low interest rates, with a government-sponsored NHA Home Improvement Loan from your bank.

If you're the owner of a small business, then you may take advantage of special Small Business loans available at your bank. And farmers can qualify for up to $15,000 with ten years to repay with a Farm Improvement Loan.

So you see, there are a whole lot of very good reasons why you should have that work done around your home or place of business during the winter. Do it now!

Everybody benefits when winter work is increased

J.D.C. BABY BOTTLE PLAN PROVES SO GOOD IT IS SPREADING

The pilot infant-feeding project of the Joint Distribution Committee in Casablanca, Morocco, now in its third and final year, has proven so successful that a similar program was begun in Marrakesh, it was reported by Charles H. Jordan, JDC Director-General.

JDC's lightening financial situation, resulting from the loss of $7,000,000 annually, formerly received from the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany, almost aborted the project. However, the Central British Fund, which has helped to finance the Casablanca project, has also made funds available for the Marrakesh project. The program, which includes milk for infants, and the education of mothers in feeding and nutrition, is operated jointly by JDC and OSE, the Moroccan Jewish health agency. OSE is supported mainly by the JDC.

The Joint Distribution Committee, which conducts health, welfare, and cultural and religious programs throughout the world, receives its funds chiefly from the campaigns of the United Jewish Appeal.

In its first year the Casablanca project benefited 236 mothers and their infants between five and nine months of age, Mr. Jordan said. This was increased by about fifty per cent the second year when the program was expanded to include infants of less than five months and toddlers between one and three. The mothers and children get help both at the OSE center and through home visits by nurses and social workers.

The new three-year project in Marrakesh is designed to serve mainly the 900 to 1,000 families living in the mellah (ghetto). Unlike Casablanca, where the powdered milk is given to the mothers for preparation at home, in Marrakesh the milk is sterilized and bottled for all infants up to one year at the OSE center, Mr. Jordan said that most of the children live under such primitive sanitary conditions that preparing the milk at home would expose the infants to bacterial infection.

Approximately 100 mothers and infants are currently participating in the program which, as in Casablanca, has now been expanded to include pre-weaning age infants and one-to-three-year-old toddlers. The Marrakesh program has also begun nutrition education for expectant and nursing mothers and home visits by a social worker.

"This pilot project, designed to correct the inadequacies in infant feeding caused by poverty, ignorance, and backwardness, will give the infants a much better chance to grow into healthy adults. It will also help the mothers to become more effective guardians of the health and well-being of their families," Mr. Jordan said.

MOTHERING IS BEST CONTRIBUTION MOTHERS CAN MAKE TO SOCIETY, SAY ONTARIO DOCTORS

Ontario's doctors prescribed a stiff dose of staying at home for working mothers, says the Toronto Globe and Mail.

The Ontario Medical Association, representing 7,200 doctors, said the nurture of children during pre-school and school years is the most important contribution a mother can make to society.

It attacked the large number of mothers, who, it said, work solely to have extra money to spend, and the existence of a society in which material status symbols and glamor take precedence over health and well-being.

The criticisms were made in a presentation to the province's select committee on youth.

The association asked the committee to support its thesis that a child's need for the presence of the mother is such that her availability to the child in the formative years should be curtailed only when absolutely necessary.

Mothers of school-age children should be encouraged to limit their employment outside the home to part-time work during hours the children are at school, the association said.

Maternal care is the most important of all environmental factors affecting a child's emotional health, the association said, because it is effective when a child is most vulnerable and basic emotional patterns are being laid down.

Among the effects of deprivation of proper care by the mother or an adequate substitute, it said, are emotional deficiencies seen later in persons who have difficulty relating to others or to society, such as schizophrenics, psychopaths, and less obviously pathological but emotionally isolated persons whose affectional relationships are very shallow.

The association attacked forces that tend to emphasize roles and activities other than mothering.

Some sources lay stress on the need for women, whether single or married, whether mothers or not, to have some continuing occupation, usually remunerative, in order to achieve their proper fulfilment, it said.

Greater freedom from housework chores is providing a basis for the belief that women need some other outlet.

"Somewhere we must make a value judgment," the doctors said. A mother working in an industrial plant might be "fulfilling her destiny" in one sense, but she would not be present to meet her children as they come home from school and hear about their day-to-day problems.

"A mother working in an office also could not be home to get her children's lunch.

"Perhaps these mothers will provide a suitable substitute for the love and concern which they would normally give their children," the association said. "Experience from several investigations suggests that the day nursery and baby-sitter may very inadequately fill the gap left by the working mother."

Widows, women separated from, or deserted by, their husbands, or women whose husbands are ill, may have to work to provide a living for themselves and their children, the association said.

It suggested income tax relief be provided where a mother or father has to employ a substitute parent during necessary absence from the home.

But many mothers, it said, work only for the monetary return. The association agreed this enables the family to buy more things, but said the suggestion that these extras will benefit the children and provide them with care and opportunities not available to their parents is open to question.

"YOU SEE, IN THE NEGRO COMMUNITY, IT'S THE EDUCATED PEOPLE WHO MAKE UP SOCIETY"

Twenty-four debutantes were presented to 2,000 guests at the Girl Friends' Cotillion, the outstanding Negro social event in Washington, given in the ball-room of the Statler-Hilton Hotel, writes Frances Lanahan, in the New York Times. There were more physicians, teachers, and doctors of philosophy present than can usually be found outside a national conference on science and education.

The fathers of ten of the 24 were doctors of various disciplines; one was Dr. Hildrus Poindexter, a pioneer in tropical diseases. Among the other distinguished fathers were the Right Rev. Dillard Huston Brown, a Bishop of the Episcopal Church; Judge William B. Bryant of the District Court; and Arthur Christopher Jr., trial examiner of the National Labor Relations Board.

The ninth annual white-tie event was put on by the Washington chapter of the Girl Friends, a women's social and charitable organization with headquarters in New York and chapters in twenty-five cities, from Newport News, to Louisville, Chicago, and Boston.

Nationally, the Girl Friends supports the legal defense fund of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People with yearly assessments from each member group. The chapters have their own social and fund-raising events. Four of them give debutante balls, whose proceeds go to the charity of their designation.

In recent years, proceeds of the cotillion in Washington have been donated to the Family and Child Services Summer Outings Committee, which runs an integrated camp program for poor children. This year, the money will go to Drew Pearson's Conscience Fund, a project, named for the columnist, that helps victims of civil-rights disorders in the South.

Each guest paid $10 for dinner and dancing to the music of Herb Deberry's twenty-piece orchestra, and not one debutante's family was allowed to contribute a further cent.

"We want to keep it the way we want it," said Mrs. Orelia Ledbetter, cotillion chairman, who teaches at the District Health School for the Physically Handicapped and is the wife of a Congregational minister and local political figure.

"We have so many pressures on us," she said, "that we could have sold the ballroom three times over, so we had to make rigid rules, such as that there will never be more than 24 debutantes, all of whom will have a satisfactory scholastic record and, as far as one can judge these things, moral integrity."

Four of the girls this year are winners of National Merit Scholarships.

Mrs. Mazaline Baird, chapter chairman, trim, attentiate, and typical of the women responsible for the party, is a counselor in the District elementary school system, says the New York Times, and the wife of a budget analyst for the Public Health Service.

"Although we are in no sense a professional organization," Mrs. Baird said, "we haven't a single 'just plain housewife' among our 21 members. One of us is an anatomy professor at Howard University; another is a statistician for the State Department; and most are teachers in the area's school system. You see, in the Negro community, it's the educated people who make up society; we have no power or money to speak of."

The debutantes, who rehearse with their escorts two hours every Sunday from mid-October, must step through a precision waltz that would sow panic in the hearts of a skilled ballet troupe. Unsure of themselves at first — most of them are high-school seniors, and their escorts freshmen at Howard, George Washington, Georgetown, or the American Universities — they were coached exactingly by Mrs. Helen Nida, the manager and owner of the Fiesta Dance Club, formerly the Fred Astaire Dance Studio.

Each girl was selected by a different local club, according to Mrs. Thelma Baltimore, the director of elementary education for the District of Columbia schools, whose husband is principal of the Bell Vocational High School and who serves as narrator for the evening's ceremony.

"We chose the clubs, and they chose one girl each," she said. "The worst problem we ever had is when one club proposed twins. Their parents had to run around until they found another sponsoring club, because if we broke the rule, there would be no end to it."

Some of the clubs are known nationally; such as the Links And Hands Across The Sea, which sends food, clothing, and toys to impoverished Jamaicans and other Caribbean islanders, says the New York Times. "The key," says Mrs. Baltimore, "is whether they're really friends of ours. That was the whole point of our club when it was started in 1934 — to bring women together who had something in common."

All Girl Friends members who worked on the ball, such as Mrs. Alicia Webb, who teaches French and Spanish in a Maryland High School and serves as debutante co-chairman, agree that it serves a function more important than just giving 24 young ladies every year the thrill of their lives in their long white ball dresses.

"We hear so much about crime and slumps and backwardness," said Mrs. Webb. "This is a chance to show the other side, the fact that we have a decent and civilized, and attractive Negro community here in the capital."

First Woman Vice-President Named By Store Chain

Ralph Lazarus, president of the Federated Department Stores, Inc., of New York, announced the appointment of Miss Rose Wells as a vice-president of the department store chain. She is the first woman to hold the title in Federated, reports the New York Times. For the last year, Miss Wells has been a consultant to the company, advising executives on the new trends and ideas in the fashion centers of the world. She will continue that role as an operating vice-president.

Miss Wells, who in private life is Mrs. Jerome Bing, retired in May, 1964, as a vice president of Ohrbach's after thirty-two years with the New York store.

She joined Ohrbach's shortly after graduation from Washington Irving High School in New York, and in 1959 was elected a vice president, the first woman to hold such an office in the store.

While directing one of Ohrbach's semi-annual import fashion shows, she coined the phrase "total look," describing a concept that seeks to impart a coordinated appearance of approval and accessories to fit the wearer's figure and personality.

Miss Wells played an integral role in the Ohrbach fashion shows featuring line-for-line copies of French couturiers' designs, which produced a high volume of fashion business for the store. The buying operation for the imported designs is directed by Sidney Gittler, another vice-president.

The Bings live in Manhattan. They have a son, Richard, aged twenty-one years, who attends the graduate school of Tufts University, says the New York Times. Mr. Bing is a merchandise man at Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc.

GHETTO MASSACRE SURVIVORS SEARCHED OUT BY WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS

Action by the World Jewish Congress in finding witnesses for more than two hundred and fifty investigations into Nazi crimes has brought to light survivors of a bloody ghetto episode from which no one was thought to have escaped, according to Samuel Bronfman, of Montreal, chairman of the North American Executive of the World Jewish Congress. This is the story of the grim episode:

Nazi troopers descended upon the ghetto of Pawliniki and systematically, ruthlessly rounded up the inmates. Into the night they disappeared; into the slaughterhouse from which there had been no return. They knew their fate and they crumpled together as the weaponry of their bestial wardens ripped into their shabby ranks. None, it seemed, survived.

But, hours later, a stealthy movement revealed the stubbornness of life. In incredible pain, driven by desperation, a woman crawled from amongst the bodies of her fellow-Jews and stumbled into an adjacent wood. The little daughter beside her had slipped, dead, from her arms. There the woman lay until, hours later, another phantom figure, bloodied, and almost nude, sank down beside her.

They gave each other some comfort and whatever care was possible to salvage their battered bodies. Stealthily, slowly, they crawled away from the scene of diabolical death. Miraculously, those two women escaped the Nazi death penalty. And lived. Later, when liberation came to Europe they left forever, desiring only to sever themselves from the scene of their grim escape.

Twenty years later, in justice's slow progress, the government of West Germany began an investigation into the crimes at Pawliniki. But how, asked the investigating attorneys, could they proceed, if no one had survived that merciless massacre?

The case came to the attention of the World Jewish Congress in New York, whose Institute of Jewish Affairs is involved in a tireless search for men and women, victims of Nazism, willing to come forward and testify against their Nazi persecutors in dozens and dozens of cases.

But the case of Pawliniki seemed impossible until minute research revealed that two persons were reported to have escaped. No one knew their names, no one knew whether they had indeed survived or where they were today. Mobilizing its global organization, the World Jewish Congress set in motion a world-wide search. From its New York offices the appeal went out. Within a matter of days the two women who had miraculously survived Pawliniki were located: one in Israel, and the other right in the heart of New York itself.

Once again the World Jewish Congress was able to perform a unique feat and in so doing, and continue its dedicated task of helping to bring to justice the men responsible for the massacre of six million. This is but one phase of the work of the World Jewish Congress on behalf of the Jewish people throughout the world.

The women must remain unidentified until the investigation into the crimes is completed. Similarily, Pawliniki is a fictitious name for a ghetto shattered by Nazi brutality.

VOL. 16 — NOVEMBER-DECEMBER, 1965 — NO. 5

Publishers' ABC Promotions Serve Double Purpose

When a publisher explains to his advertisers and readers the significance and service of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, he is providing one of the main channels of communication on which the Audit Bureau depends for public education. Without this main line, many readers and advertisers could only ponder the meaning of the familiar hexagon.

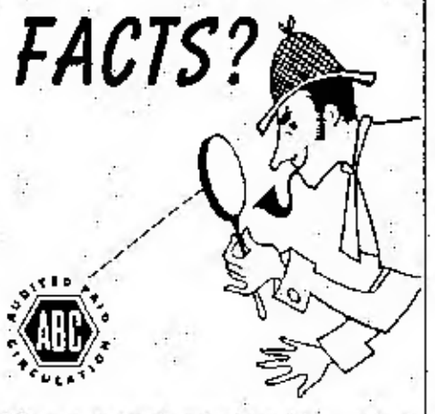
But in so explaining the purpose and function of the ABC, the publisher also sheds light on the meaning of his membership to those who would either purchase space in or read his publication.

Thus good promotional display advertisements serve a double purpose of importance to both the publisher and the Audit Bureau as an organization.

With the cooperation of publishers, sending in their original ABC promotion efforts, the News Bulletin will periodically serve as an idea pool, from which other publisher members may draw inspiration for their own display advertisements or editorial material.

Here are only two such contributions:

HOW DO I KNOW THE FACTS?



The exact number of people who read this magazine is a vital index of its worth. Therefore, any circulation claim must be known and factual.

The Audit Bureau of Circulations is the organization established by the publishers themselves to verify authoritatively and regularly each the circulation statements of its publishing members. Its principal job is to see to it that publishers report only the facts to advertisers and the public.

In practice, its standard audit report tells not only the readers and their coverage, but also how they are distributed, and how they pay.

The Audit Bureau of Circulations benefits everyone — readers, advertisers, publishers. Proof is your assurance of getting what you pay for during your participation in any ABC publication.

TOWN & COUNTRY

Using a question and answer approach, the Canadian Jewish Review came up with an ad (right) which devotes a great deal of space to telling the reader almost all of the essentials of ABC operation. Note the ad also includes an interpretation of just what these essentials mean to the advertiser. Several Hearst Magazines ran the second ad (above), which cuts out much detail of ABC operation and speaks specifically to both reader and advertiser on what the Hearst Magazines' ABC membership means to them.

What is the A. B. C. or Audit Bureau of Circulations, and what is its importance?

A. The A. B. C. is a voluntary association of major publishers, advertisers, national and local; and advertising agencies, working together to police circulation claims, and to translate them into facts.

Q. Why are circulation facts so important?

A. Circulation figures are the only honest basis on which print advertising is sold and purchased. Publishers base their prices for advertising on the amount of their circulation, and its quality. An advertiser buys circulation. A. B. C. circulation facts tell him the exact amount at any time.

Q. How does an advertiser know that this is really so?

A. A. B. C. publishers keep exact records of all circulation receipts for subscriptions and single copy sales. These can tell him, too, whether the circulation is sold without a premium, or with one, to induce payment; or whether the circulation is composed of membership in an organization; or whether it is sold on its merit alone. Was the subscription sold on a special rate? Was it paid by mail directly to the publisher, or to an agent? These are just some of the categories of subscription payments which are recorded.

Q. Why are some of these answers so important?

A. Sometimes these answers can tell an advertiser whether the subscriber needs to be coaxed into continuing, or starting. Are subscribers voluntarily buying the publication? Do they need a cut-rate or an added attraction to keep on?

Q. How are the figures checked?

A. The publisher checks his figures, and reports them twice a year to the head office of the A. B. C. These are audited once a year by travelling A. B. C. auditors, who check the names, the receipts, the printing invoices, the bank deposits, the paper used, the ink used, the postage receipts — all of these show the number of copies printed or mailed; and paid for. If an A.B.C. field auditor goes to work for a publication whose books he has audited within a year or so, there is an automatic re-audit by another auditor. An auditor does not audit the figures of any publication for more than two consecutive years.

Q. Does the A. B. C. allow past-due subscriptions?

A. The A. B. C. rules state that all subscriptions up for renewal must be paid within three months of the expiry date. The publisher must keep track of each one. These are considered paid, but not completely so, until paid in full, for the term to come.

Q. Are new subscriptions considered as paid?

A. Not until payment is received for the term in advance.

Q. What does this cost the publisher?

A. The publisher considers the membership as his investment to protect the investment of each advertiser. The publisher pays quarterly dues; the cost of the auditing done in his office, by the hour; and the cost of checking done further, at the A. B. C. head office. If further checking is needed, the publisher pays that cost, too. An auditor spends several days in the Canadian Jewish Review office each year.

Q. Are these the only costs?

A. The greatest cost to the publisher is to see that the records are kept in order and up to date. The Canadian Jewish Review addressograph plates are posted to show the date and method and amount of payment; and the date of the subscription, and the length of its term. A publication must carry on the address label all information that the auditor would need to guide him in checking. A publication which sells subscriptions on short-term, or with a premium, or in combination with other publications, for instance, will carry all that information and more, on the address label, coded in some way.

Q. What do A. B. C. reports and statements say about the Canadian Jewish Review?

A. They tell at a quick glance the provincial break-down; the amount sold in a period; that the Canadian Jewish Review never sells a subscription on a premium; never with a cut rate; never jointly with another publication; never as part of membership in an organization.

The Canadian Jewish Review is sold on its own merits, and always has been.
It has no affiliation with any organization.

A.B.C. reports and statements supply facts to advertisers.
These facts need to be known for advertising money to be spent wisely and honestly.

A. B. C. publications can never guarantee results. They do guarantee readership.

The Canadian Jewish Review is in its 22nd year of supplying facts to advertisers, investing to protect investments.
The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only publication reaching the general Jewish community in Canada, which can provide audited, paid, A. B. C. circulation facts and figures for the protection of each advertiser.
